Hoopeston residents honored at annual banquet

New, familiar awards given

Three local businesses and two individuals were honored Monday night for their contributions to Hoopeston.

The Hoopeston Chamber of Commerce presented awards to businesses in service, industry and retail categories, based on not only Chamber, but also community activities.

Silgan Containers was named the winner in the industry category, chosen from three nominations. In retail, Brown's Cash & Carry was selected from eight nominees. Silver Bros. Construction took home honors in the service classification, named from nine submissions.

Nominees were submitted by Chamber members, said organization president Russ Leigh. Winners were chosen by the group's executive committee, comprised of Leigh, Tina Buhrmester, Charlie Smith and Judi Benjamin.

Judging was based on five criteria: Chamber membership, Chamber activity, community activity, civic pride and adaptability to the business environment, Leigh said.

While this is the first time the Chamber has publicly awarded businesses, it is an idea that has been discussed for some time. "We've always given out some kind of internal awards among the board members," Leigh said.

Businesses were not the only ones honored by the Chamber. Two individuals, Mabel Mathieson and Howard Gaddis, were honored for their contribution not only to the Chamber, but also to the community.

Mathieson is a long-time volunteer at Hoopeston Community Nursing Home and Country Terrace, among other activities, Leigh said.

Gaddis was honored for his efforts in several civic organizations, including the Hoopeston Lions Club.

Neither of the honorees seek recognition for what they do, Leigh said. "They volunteer and they think nobody notices," Leigh said. "Well, some people on the Chamber noticed."

Gaddis and Mathieson, as well as representatives of each of the businesses, were unaware they were receiving awards and it took some effort to get them to the banquet. "It's like the CIA," Leigh said. "You gotta lie, cheat and steal to get everybody there."

The Chamber was not the only organization to recognize contributions to the community.

For the eighth year, the Hoopeston Chronicle presented its Hall of Fame and Citizen of the Year awards and, also for the eighth year, the Hoopeston Area Education Association presented Teacher of the Year.

This year's Hall of Fame award was given to Don Dean, Hoopeston Area school superintendent.

The award, based on life-long service to the community, was given to Dean for his 34-year history with local schools, as teacher, coach, principal and superintendent, as well as his 20-year tenure as city clerk.

The Citizen of the Year award, also for service to the community, was presented to Joan Stover of the Hoopeston Multi Agency.

Stover has worked at the Multi Agency since 1978, serving as driver of the agency van. During the evenings, Stover also helps with the disabled.

She also is active in her church, serving as an elder and a member of the choir and bell chorus.

This year's Teacher of the Year, Margaret Mulcahey, is a sixth grade teacher at John Greer.

Mulcahey, along with other candidates, was nominated by at least one other teacher. The slate of
